Eastie strikes again!

Paul Russell, co-founder of Christian Community Theater, proudly displays the Eastie award he received last week at the opening night of Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Cinderella." Russell was voted Best Director at the Easties awards ceremony held in March, but could not attend due to a prior commitment. Judge discusses roots of crime at Peace Officer Appreciation dinner

by Sheila B. Jurist

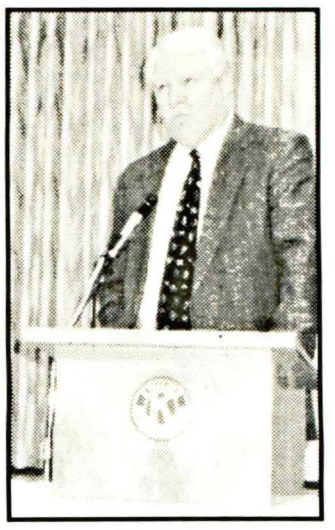
Families fragmented by overworked parents and media filled with violent sights and sounds are the main causes of the escalation of violent crime, according to one of San Diego Superior Court's highest-ranking officials.

Assistant Presiding Judge Wayne Peterson, a member of the Spring Valley Kiwanis Club, was the keynote speaker at the Peace Officer Appreciation Dinner sponsored by the Kiwanis last week.

Peterson's talk was just a part of the dinner, held at Santa Sophia Catholic Church, which also gave the Kiwanis Club an opportunity to thank law enforcement officers for their continuing hard work.

"It's great!" said Capt. Yolanda Collins of the Lemon Grove Command. "It's nice that people recognize law enforcement in Spring Valley, and that the Kiwanis appreciate us for what we do."

Collins' officers also cover Casa de Oro, Spring Valley, Rancho San Diego, Jamul and the other unincorporated areas of La Mesa and El Cajon.



Judge Wayne Peterson

Referring specifically to Spring Valley, Collins stated there is a police satellite office at 531 Sweetwater Road. This Community Oriented Policing Station (COPS) office in the new Lucky mall is headed by Sgt. Frank Bird.

"There's a lot of excitement and difficulties, but when you're through with your shift, it can be rewarding," Collins told the group. "Being a deputy requires that you enjoy working with all kinds of people with a variety of backgrounds. Sometimes you have to work in the jail. However, I find it quite enjoyable."

Collins said when she joined the department in 1976, there was only a handful of women doing law enforcement work. Today, there are many more women involved in the department.

Judge Peterson was invited to speak about the causes of increasing crime, especially within the next generation — the people who will be running the country in 15 - 20 years.

"There are more problems that evolve out of fragmented families than anything else," Peterson told the audience, comprising officers from the Sheriff's Department, Highway Patrol and Retired Senior Volunteers in Policing (RSVP). "Additionally, films that depict casual violence contribute to the problem. Children can usually differentiate between movies which depict violence as reality, and cartoons, such as those involving the coyote and the roadrunner. What is bad for children, is to see live movies depicting the casual violence."

Music with violent lyrics adds to the crime problem, Peterson said. In the 1940s and '50s, these problems were not common. The burgeoning influence of television in the 1960s and '70s, however, seems to have escalated crime problems, he said.

During the time Peterson was primarily hearing felony cases, he found that one-third of the defendants had some association with gangs in their past. Currently 707 youths have been tried as adults in the San Diego area.

"The degree of violence is stomach wrenching," he said.

Peterson also works with cases of workplace violence, often involving a terminated employee.

"Employers nowadays, are taking seriously any threats made toward their companies," Peterson said.

Kiwanis President Clarence Kaufman discussed club-sponsored youth groups and training in the community. Some of the young people present, including Boy Scout Troop 351 and the La Presa Middle School Builders Club, were there to help serve and clear during the dinner.

The Peace Office Appreciation dinner was also co-sponsored by the Dictionary Hill Citizens Association, San Diego Gas & Electric and William L. Boyer, D.D.S.

Foothills Gallery exhibits artwork by girls in jail

by Lora Clark

Foothills Art Association is sponsoring the first community showing of artwork from youngsters involved in the Juvenile Justice System.

During the month of July, 12 original pieces created by the residents of the Girls Rehabilitation Facility will be exhibited at Foothills Art Gallery, 8051 University Ave. in La Mesa.

The theme of this unique exhibit, "New Beginnings," was suggested by volunteer art instructor Geraldina Rocha.

Rocha encouraged the girls to think about themselves and what they hope to do when they have served their term and are able to leave the facility.

Girls drew houses made of flowers, rainbows, and angels. One sports-minded girl with a sweet tooth drew a cone with a basketball substituting for the scoop of ice cream.

"It's amazing what these kids can do," exclaimed Rocha. "Their minds are so open for ideas. It's incredible what they have produced, especially since most of them have had absolutely no previous art instruction."

Rocha, a volunteer with Reclaimed Hope, has been working with the residents of the girl's facility since last October. The young people, aged 12 - 17, are divided into three groups, Section A, B, and C, with 10 to 12 girls in each group. On a rotating basis, Rocha works with one section for 2 1/2 hours every Wednesday.

"I want to help these girls express their negative and positive emotions in their drawings, just as I do," explained Rocha.

The concept for the exhibit at Foothills Art Gallery originated when Judge Alvin Green, Jr., who has been with the juvenile bench for six months, displayed the girls' artwork in his courtroom.

His primary aim for the girls is their rehabilitation and believes that fostering their creativity can be an important help.

Green is eager to establish other community-based locations to showcase the girls' artwork.

The Girls Rehabilitation Facility which opened in 1981, is operated by the county Probation Department, and is a minimum-security setting for adolescent girls.

The Kearny Mesa location provides a school setting, drug and alcohol intervention, and a variety of programs designed to help the girls make better choices. The art program has become an important addition to the facility.

"Unfortunately, our budget doesn't' allow for a lot of things we'd like to have, including paid art teachers," stated Patrick Stalnaker, public affairs coordinator for the Probation Department. "We are always looking for volunteers."

Two volunteer programs, Reclaimed Hope, a non-profit organization whose aim is to bring art to youth, and Volunteers in Probation, are operating at the facility.

Michelle A. Bennett, director of Reclaimed Hope, may be reached at 296-3597. Jean McClear, volunteer coordinator for Volunteers in Probation, can be reached at 694-4364.

Although the drawings are not for sale, donations will be accepted to purchase art supplies for these young artists. Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday.

Letter to the Editor

M is for misinformation

Publication of my letter ["I'd rather put up than shut up," June 11 issue] brought forth a polite and reasoned reply from Mayor Sessom ["Letter to the Editor full of false information," June 18 issue] but, unfortunately, it contained erroneous information and incorrect interpretations of actual events.

The city's safety net, the reserve account recommended by the bonding underwriters, should be $1,500,000 and any less would "make them nervous." The city manager recommended $1,007,000, since he must have had other plans for spending the money. Final council choice was less than the underwriters recommended. Not a very good sign for the city's financial reputation with lending institutions.

Facts are that the $1 million penalty and costs for premature reborrowing of the Redevelopment Agency funds would not have been assessed if the mayor and her two sure votes would have approved bond payments according the repayment schedule and for which funds were available. Payments could not be made because those available funds were earmarked for administration needs like raises for upper-level employees (among other needs were a golden parachute and car allowance for city manager and who else?), plus over-generous medical/dental plans for the council and more unneeded squandering of city money.

Boosting salary and goodies for the city manager seems strange since he has divested himself of many of the responsibilities he used to perform by himself under Jack Shelver. No fire department, fire inspector, building inspector or plan check personnel oversight since those functions have been hired out to private companies. Paying consultants and hiring department heads to cover the various other functions. Are the mayor's loyal followers aware that she and the "Gang of Three" she led have, in the past, rubber-stamped practically everything presented by the city manager?

Ms. Sessom called me down for not attending the budget meetings and I will be glad to furnish my reason after I deal with the subject of 24 of her loyal supporters writing a scurrilous letter about an unnamed councilman which was published in these columns before the election. These loyal friends, good people all, had a council attendance record equal to mine but, it would appear, they lack my interest and concern for the welfare of Lemon Grove. I don't attend the meetings, but I do keep up with what's happening to my city.

The reason I don't attend meetings is of major seriousness to me: in my mid-80s, the number of years I have left before I leave this earth are few enough. I don't want to hasten that event through death by boredom.

A dream led us, 20 years ago, to walk the streets and knock on doors in order to convince Lemon Grovers to vote to form a city. Most of the 23 candidates for the council (I was one – didn't win, came in 11th) opted for a rural atmosphere – a city of single-family homes. A bedroom city for San Diego. Huh! We didn't get it. We got a source of money accumulation sufficient to arouse the "greed" and the "what's in it for me" factor. At one point, there was even a strong movement by several of the Lemon Grove elite to open a gambling casino in Lemon Grove.

In closing, I note that Mayor Sessom claims the city spends $1 million a year on the streets. I assure her that the citizens would be happier if that amount was raised to $2 million and if the classification of Code Enforcer was eliminated and replaced by one titled "Code Advisor." And while I'm making suggestions, since you're rubbing your hands over the great influx of sales tax money, how about lowering, instead of the planned raising, of permit fees. Santee did it.

Commentary

Treason is taking it too far

by Paul Treske

Commenting negatively on the works of other writers is, quite frankly, distasteful to a team player like myself, but an ill-thought out and reckless commentary I recently read demands a response.

Not since the unlamented days of Senator Joe McCarthy and his red-baiting colleague Richard Nixon have I seen the word "treason" used on a Democratic rival. Such careless accusations were rife during the period of the early 1950s, when it was fashionable to paint anyone who didn't want to instantly drop the bomb on Russia with that odious word.

I thought that time and reason had brought us far from the days when men like Dwight Eisenhower and George Marshall were referred to as "willing tools of the Communist conspiracy." Unfortunately, it would appear that once again it has become more acceptable to accuse those with whom we disagree of "treason" and similar high and dastardly crimes.

Have we forgotten that it was one of the right-wing favorites, Nixon himself, who first opened the Western door to China? Of course, only he could have done it, because if a Democrat had done so at that time, he would have immediately been accused of treason. Since Nixon had been one of the chief "treason" accusers, it was hard to tar him with the same brush.

It was the treason business that most got my dander up, but there are other things in print that would be funny if today's political climate didn't make them so unfortunate. At one point, I read of the "Red Menace." Good grief, that phrase had gone out by the mid-80s along with "evil empire," disco and the hula hoop. Surely there are those who find the world a less black and white place now that the Soviet threat has faded into oblivion, and that scares them a bit. But to bring up the "Red Menace" over China would seem to be stretching things a bit.

Finally, to suggest that the atomic brandishing of India and Pakistan is all a "red herring" orchestrated by Bill Clinton to cloud the main issue of his relations with China is to give the president far more credit for international power than he has ever been able to exert.

Worst of all, most of these local diatribes appear to come right from the mouth of the obvious master, Rush Limbaugh, who makes a living out of cynically using his show-business platform to attack anyone who even thinks the word or concept of liberal. Considering the source, I usually laugh it all off, but when the truly ugly word "treason" surfaces, those of us who believe in real constitutional liberty have got to say something. I have.

The bridal registry

I'd heard about it. It was one of those marketing advances in an industry that has grown and grown over the years. But not having to purchase wedding presents for any of my contemporaries for a while, I hadn't paid much attention to the bridal registry. I was out of the loop. An appropriate gift buying procedure for weddings? I hadn't a clue.

That changed when I was commandeered by my daughter for a wedding gift shopping safari. She needed to buy a gift for a couple of her college friends who were, as we used to say, getting hitched. As she dragged me to a store that specialized in "tasteful home furnishings" I was about to be educated to a whole new way of doing things. What an eye opener it would be.

I'm sure the distaff readers are probably chuckling at this example of total naivete on my part. But for me, and perhaps some of those other readers with that renegade X chromosome, it's a whole new world. A world where modern technology is coupled with no nonsense practicality. And it's all linked together by computers and unbridled greed.

For the two or three of you who, like me, have had no experience with this revolutionary wish-fulfilling technique, a few brief sentences: the bridal registry is based on the principle of "Ask and ye shall receive." A couple about to embark on the path of wedded bliss make up a wish-list of all the things they think necessary for that trip to be successful. After compiling a list that will leave them free from the task of furnishing their home for the next several years, said list is turned over to the appropriate store, more likely stores. I suspect that very clever about-to-be newlyweds have different lists for different stores, thus covering a wider range of furnishings.

Once the list has been turned in, the store enters it into its central data bank. Jack and Jill's list is then available to all the store's outlets—from sea to shining sea. It's fail-safe: far better than the tooth fairy or a Dear Santa list.

I'm not exactly sure how the prospective wedding attendee knows which stores are bridal-registered, but I'm sure that piece of information is included somewhere: perhaps in the invitation or the RSVP or some mystical, unexplained missive. However it is accomplished, the finished product is a wonder. All one has to do is go into a registered store, type the individual's name into the computer, and voila, the list. And what a list. Not only is there the wish list, but the particulars and specifics of those wishes. A set of four. Queen size. Complete place settings for eight. And to round out this perfect document, there are two columns: one labeled "Wants" the other indicating "Already Purchased." How much better could it get?

I'm guessing that this bridal registry thing is not a passing fancy. There's too much at stake and there are too many benefactors. The bride and her accomplice. Sales personnel. Loan companies. The World Bank. I also suspect that enterprising souls throughout the land are developing similar "registries." Babies come to mind. So too does the progression through school. How about a kindergarten registry. Help get that kidling off to a good start in school, graduation day registry? Entering the work force registry? Finally, there would be a retirement registry followed by the nursing home registry.

Now that I see the beauty of this concept, there's no stopping me. Well, maybe the end of my allotted space would do it. Sure enough.

Reel Thoughts

Strong women work the big screen

by Betty Jo Tucker

Clark Gable as Rhett Butler and Vivien Leigh as Scarlett O'Hara share a tender moment in New Line Cinema's re-release of "Gone With the Wind."

Independent. Brave. Strong-willed. Beautiful. Not without faults. Most moviegoers will recognize this description of Scarlett O'Hara, now making a return appearance on the big screen in New Line Cinema's reissue of that acclaimed film epic, "Gone With The Wind." Scarlett, as played by Oscar-winner Vivien Leigh, still lights up the screen with her luminous features and explosive temperament.

Another fascinating heroine takes center stage in "Mulan," the latest full-length animated movie from Walt Disney Pictures. Although Mulan is a young Chinese woman who lived 2,000 years ago, she shares many of Scarlett O'Hara's qualities. Her strengths also lie in her independent nature and her courage. But she too has faults that get her in trouble. While Scarlett's vanity and selfishness cause the loss of the man she loves, Mulan's stubborn behavior leads her into a charade that almost costs her life. Both women try to fool others about their true selves. Scarlett disguises her poverty after the Civil War by wearing a gown made from old draperies. Mulan poses as a man by dressing in her ailing father's military uniform.

Like Scarlett, Mulan survives a period of devastating warfare. She plays a more active part in the war by serving as a soldier. (According to legend, she saved China from the invading Huns.) This nontraditional warrior finally finds happiness by going home, just as Scarlett does by returning to her beloved plantation, Tara.

Despite their similarities, the differences between these two heroines are quite dramatic. Scarlett would deplore Mulan's lack of concern over her appearance. With that tiny waist and jet black hair, Mulan should have just as many suitors as Scarlett, yet she is so clumsy even the village matchmaker gives up on her. While Scarlett uses her wiles to manipulate men, Mulan relies on her intelligence to carry out fiery battle strategies.

The American Film Institute recently ranked "GWTW" as one of the five greatest American movies made through 1996 (along with "Citizen Kane," "Casablanca," "The Godfather" and "Lawrence of Arabia"). Released too late for this list, "Mulan" represents the joy of cinematic storytelling at its dazzling best. Still, like the two women they celebrate, neither film is without its faults. "GWTW" includes scenes of overblown sentimentality, and "Mulan" flirts with bad taste in its humorous treatment of ancestor worship. Nevertheless, these "G" rated films, made almost 60 years apart, give viewers two unforgettable heroines to treasure. Both are worth seeing more than once.

Letter to the Editor

Carlson is my candidate

There seems to be an underlying uneasiness throughout our community and our state when our thoughts turn towards our youth and our schools. This uneasiness may be caused by the recent violence in our schools throughout the nation. During these times, we often turn to our leaders and our schools themselves for answers. Marge Carlson, candidate for the 77th State Assembly District understands these concerns.

Marge is the person you can turn to. She is a retired teacher of 31 years, and a 25 year veteran teacher in the Cajon Valley School District. Because of this deep concern for our young people and her knowledge of our local school systems, Marge Carlson pledges to the people of the 77th State Assembly District: true education reform through lower class size and higher academic standards, local control for school districts to decide educational curriculum, public school choice, tough "Zero Tolerance" school programs for guns, violence, drugs and truancy, safer, and healthier school buildings and facilities, and effective use of the taxpayers' education dollar.

I can trust Marge Carlson with my children's and my grandchildren's education. We really need to be able to turn to someone like Marge Carlson as a leader in our State Assembly.

Predictable 'Cinderella' a brilliant backdrop for outrageous cameos

by Greg Eichelberger

By his own admission, Christian Community Theater co-founder Paul Russell concedes their newest offering, "Cinderella," was really nothing more than a "fluff, fantasy piece without too much meat on its bones."

But that doesn't mean he didn't have fun directing it.

"Personally, I like to do shows that are a bit more substantial, dramatically speaking," he said. "Productions that touch the spirit more. On the other hand, with a show like this, I asked all of the cast members to brainstorm and come up with any funny gimmick they could and we'd see how it flies."

That concept produced two of the best performances in this Rogers and Hammerstein musical, based on the 12th-century French fairy tale.

Since everyone knows the story, there's no need to dissect the plot and, as with any nursery rhyme, the lead characters are perfect and beyond reproach.

There is no exception here as Errolyn Yavorsky playing the title role and her hunky Prince Charming, Chris O'Bryon, fit the bill perfectly. Neither has the opportunity to stretch very much, inhibited by the fact that they have to act in a certain, more dignified way. While it would be nice to see some plain folk get the leads for a change, this is, after all, a fantasy.

Cindy's nasty stepmother and sisters play on the negative stereotypes of fat or unattractive women being evil.

The first to take break out of this predictable backdrop is CCT vet Stephanie Hargrove of El Cajon (an Eastie Award nominee for "South Pacific"). Although on stage just a few minutes, her Fairy Godmother takes full advantage of the time by belting out "Impossible" in a sort of a Whitney Houston/Ella Fitzgerald combination of soul and skat.

"I was reluctant to try it at first," she said. "And it was only during the dress rehearsals that I finally got it down right."

As good as Hargrove was in her limited appearances, the real winner on opening night was El Cajon's Elayn Thoeny. Making her stage debut as stepsister Portia, she grabbed the show, stuck it in her purse and walked out the door.

Her high-pitched whine (sort of a cross between Judy Tenuta and Sally Struthers) could make Helen Keller's ears bleed and her pratfalls sent the patrons into hysterics every time.

A costume designer by trade (she outfitted Octad-One's "My Three Angels" and will do CCT's "Man Of La Mancha"), this El Cajon Valley High School alum and Grossmont College student keeps the show jumping.

Even Russell didn't know what to expect from her.

"I was laughing so hard because I never knew what she was going to come up with," he said. "But that's what makes directing a show like this so fun, the unexpected quality of everything."

Another peripheral character was Steve Richards ("Damn Yankees," "Crazy for You") as the King. Playing him like Joe Besser — the hulking, lisping man-child from the old Abbott and Costello TV series — he brings a minor part to the forefront and adds another nice touch of inspired farce to his infrequent scenes. Not bad for someone who's a gynecologist in his spare time!

Rounding out the cast are Louise Smith (Eastie nominee for "Annie") as the Queen, Charlene Diebelka ("The Sound Of Music") as the stepmother, Paula Steiger ("Fiddler On The Roof," "Godspell") as the tall stepsister, and James D. Wigdahl ("Annie," "Little Women") as the narrator.

There were a few sound glitches, especially during scene three with the King and Queen (which may explain the audiences rather tepid response to the songs in the first act), but the comedy of Hargrove and Thoeny made up for that.

Even when Yavorsky was in rags, she was still much too comely to be thought of so disparagingly. She even meets the Prince in the beginning of the play and he's smitten with her, too (he forgets that later on, though).

Despite starting slow, the production builds to a fine crescendo, aided by a 27-piece orchestra (conducted by Sandy Adams), as well as a large chorus of waiters, waltzers and other subjects. The costumes, designed by Terri Davis, also bring brilliance, color and light to the fantasy.

So load up the kids, the parents and the grandmas and grandpas and bring them to Mount Helix to see this one. It's a great way to spend the evening under the stars. With "West Side Story" and "Man Of La Mancha" on the horizon, you'll have to get your laughs in on this one.

"Cinderella" is playing every at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday through July 11. For tickets prices and other details, call the CCT office at 588-0206.

Forum Family Movie Guide

by Betty Jo Tucker

Many parents want more information about films than the Motion Picture Association of America provides in its rating system. To assist them, Forum publishes a monthly list of new releases with notations of specific areas that might cause concern. This guide does not rate a film's artistic quality and is not intended as an attempt at censorship. It is offered only as a resource for parents.

During July, 1998, the following new movies will be playing at local theaters:

ARMAGEDDON (PG-13). A team of oil core drillers plants a nuclear device inside an asteroid headed toward earth. Filled with loud explosions and action violence.

CAN'T HARDLY WAIT (PG-13). High school graduation brings changed relationships for would-be writer and a girl dumped by her boyfriend. Contains sexual situations, teen-age drinking, and strong language.

COUSIN BETTE (R). Bitter spinster plots revenge on an entire family. Includes sexual situations and nudity.

DR. DOLITTLE (PG-13). Physician's life and career are complicated by his ability to talk to animals. Contains crude language and bathroom humor.

GONE WITH THE WIND (G). Strong-willed southern belle survives Civil War tragedies. Includes family deaths, battle injuries, and one famous expletive.

HAV PLENTY (R). Three women throw themselves at a homeless writer. Includes sexual situations and strong language.

HENRY FOOL (R). A shy trash man becomes famous by writing iconoclastic poetry. This movie contains excessive profanity, sexual situations, violence, and a suicide.

MADELINE (PG). Film version of Ludwig Bemelman's children's book about the adventures of a mischievous French school girl. Features comic danger scenes and some questionable language.

OUT OF SIGHT (R). Beautiful U.S. Marshal and handsome criminal play cops and robbers, Elmore Leonard style. Contains violence, strong language, sexual situations.

Rhett Butler (Clark Gable) woos a teary Scarlett O'Hara (Vivien Leigh) in New Line Cinema's re-release of "Gone With the Wind."

PASSION IN THE DESERT (PG-13). Napoleonic army captain becomes infatuated with a leopard while lost in the Sahara. Includes nudity, an amputation, a desert battle, a leopard attack, and one erotic petting scene.

SMALL SOLDIERS (PG-13). Prototype playthings engage in warfare against their owners and each other. Opens July 10, but not screened to date.

THE HANGING GARDEN (R). Gay man returns home to dysfunctional family for sister's wedding. Includes drug use, sexuality, violence, and a teenager's dead body hanging from a tree.

THE LAND GIRLS (R). A group of English women volunteer to work on farms while the men go off to fight World War II. Contains sexual situations.

THE X-FILES (PG-13). Special FBI Agents investigate a secret plot that could alter life on earth as we know it. Contains mild profanity, sci-fi violence, a gunshot wound, and scary disfigurements.
